SUMMARY OF THE PROJECT

Summary of the implemented project

Background

During the application process and at the start of this project in October 2020, there was little room for optimism for EU enlargement. At that time, the French "no" to opening negotiations with North Macedonia and Albania further aggravated the situation in the region. To regain momentum, the European Commission proposed a renewed enlargement methodology and prepared a communiqué for the Western Balkans Summit in Zagreb in May 2020.

The Western Balkans were and are still facing deeply rooted structural problems ranging from a flawed state of democracy to state capture. While political elites claim to be democratic, they engage in clientelistic policies that prevented social inclusion and deepened cleavages. To involve more with democratic and emancipatory civic movements in the region, a particular focus on the social dimension of enlargement remains crucial. It is encouraging that today social engagement, calling for free and just societies, is on the rise and can initiate a new wave of democratisation and Europeanisation, thus becoming a true alternative to the current elite set-up.

The next years will be decisive for the democratic and European future of the Western Balkans. In addition to a credible enlargement perspective and a positive enlargement narrative, it is still more vital than ever to support the rule of law, civil dialogue, pluralism, and the fight against corruption, as well as the social dimension. It is crucial to invest more in social inclusion to support the broad vision of just and democratic societies, which needs to include various bottom-up initiatives and actors.

Objectives

The main objectives were

- to reform, consolidate, and reenergise EU enlargement.
- to mobilise, support, and engage with progressive and emancipatory forces from below that are truly European and pro-democratic.
- to enhance youth and alternative voices and forces in society.
- to strengthen the social dimension, rule of law, and justice in the region.
- to connect young and senior researchers, scholars, representatives of civil society, national and EU institutions, stakeholders, policy-makers, and citizens engaged in pro-democratic initiatives.

Implementation

The proposed activities were implemented in 3 phases:

I Rule of law and justice / II Social dimension / III Democratisation from below

Thus, the main focus of the "WB2EU Network" was to activate, connect, research, disseminate, and create joint output on the defined topics by bringing together academia, civil society, and relevant stakeholders at the national, regional, and EU levels.

Results

- 1 Policy Brief by each partner per phase (overall 45 editions)
- 1 kick-off event
- 1 closing event
- 6 "Ideas go public Labs"
- 1 "Summer School"
- a new online platform/website: www.wb2eu.eu (contains all project activities and results)
- a series of videos, op-eds, and interviews
- a final publication
- intense social media and dissemination activities

Implemented activities

Description of the implemented activities

The project relied on the carefully calibrated expertise of 17 independent policy research institutes and academic institutions from 16 countries that were most decisive for the enlargement process in the last few years. The composition of the network and project design ensured the stability and internal coherence of the research team and the accomplishment of the planned objectives and activities. The 6 "Ideas go public Labs", the "Summer School" and both the kick-off and the closing event offered the opportunity to critically evaluate the ongoing research, appraise its practical relevance, and meet the public (including relevant stakeholders) to share results and promote Europeanisation.

The design of the "Ideas go public Labs" combined a project network meeting, followed by an intense workshop or round table, and a public outreach event. All public events included representatives from civic initiatives from below. Young researchers nominated by the project partners played a very prominent and active role in the "Ideas go public Labs" and the "Summer School". As part of the project, a Summer School was designed and organised at the premises of the University of Rijeka on the island of Cres in Croatia. It was a very positive experience, out of which a further network of 17 young experts from 13 different countries has established itself. A tangible outcome was a joint op-ed, which the group had worked on, and 21 videos with statements by all participants and some speakers.

All partner organisations produced 15 Policy Briefs in each of the three project phases: 1. rule of law and justice; 2. social dimension; and 3. democratisation from below. The "Ideas go public Labs" and "Network Meetings" served for discussion on the drafts of the Policy Briefs. The Austrian network organisations ÖGfE and oiip took care of editing, proofreading, designing, publishing, and dissemination. The "Ideas go public Labs" also provided room for the presentation and discussion of the final Policy Briefs to main stakeholders and to a wider public.

The network partners from the Western Balkans provided a national perspective on the project phases. The neighbouring countries (Croatia, Slovenia, Greece, Hungary, Bulgaria, and Rumania) offered insights into the (trans)regional dimension of the topic, while the Policy Briefs from important EU member states for the process (France, Germany, and Italy) tackled the topic from the perspective of the EU institutions and member states. Each Policy Brief offers concrete policy recommendations.

The Final Publication "Vision Western Balkans 2030 – Europeanisation meets democracy" comprises 15 contributions by the WB2EU Network members, selected op-eds by them and the network's "Next Generation Summer School" participants, and outlines the results and highlights of the project.

The WB2EU Network published 21 op-eds in different media and released 34 videos.

Intense dissemination was made via social media channels, newsletters, and a media partnership (European Western Balkans).

The network is set to continue working together and supporting the process of EU enlargement in the Western Balkans after the end of the project, be it in the form of already established personal and institutional ties, through various channels of communication and outreach established within the network, or by being present in public debates on EU enlargement through eminent members of the network. One successful follow-up project was already realised in the form of a Summer School at Cres in September 2023.

All activities and results of the project can be found on the project website: www.wb2eu.eu

Changes in relation to the application

Due to the delayed start of the project on October 29, 2020, instead of September 1, 2020, and the subsequent COVID-19 travel restrictions, we were forced to slightly adapt the nature and the timetable of our project activities.

The first two events had to be organised in online formats. Thus, travel and subsistence costs for the project leader and the 16 partners could not be used as planned in two cases:

1. Kick-off Event, Vienna (March 23–24, 2021)
2. 1st Ideas go public Lab, Sarajevo (May 31–June 11, 2021)

Therefore, the budget (621247 AT NETWORK Annex III) was adapted due to an amendment, and the then available financial means could be used to further improve dissemination, visibility, outreach, quality, and impact of the project by combining more efficient online activities and additional communication channels with a stronger focus on media and professional technical tools.

We agreed in the amendment to shift the travel and subsistence costs for the two above-mentioned events to the following, partly new, activities:

- Media cooperation and activities with a stronger focus on dissemination and higher outreach
- Technical equipment and tools for online and social media activities (livestreaming, videos, etc.)
- More investment in publications (proofreading, templates, and graphs) to ensure better quality and more visibility via online channels and social media;
- More budget for the Summer School plus travel and subsistence costs for the participants
- Travel and subsistence (1 night) for 2 representatives of the project coordinator in case of an agency event in Brussels (which was not included in the original budget calculation but did not take place)

The venue of the closing event was changed. Finally, it took place in Vienna and not in Brussels. The reason for our decision was, on the one hand, that, unfortunately, we could only arrange the project kick-off event online and were not able to organise the event as planned in Vienna. On the other hand, we were convinced that we could offer in Vienna a more special venue and programme.

In some partner institutions, the team changed during the project duration.

Additionally, the WB2EU Network regularly involved students and interns in the implementation of the project activities, e.g., Maša Vračar, Melika Mahmutović, Petar Mrdović, Marin Jašić, Margherita Salvia, Fjölle Ibrahimji, et al.

Impact, visibility and dissemination

The network was established to become a reference point in the area of EU enlargement and democratisation efforts in the Western Balkan countries. Besides the research and policy focus of the network, the outreach element was of crucial importance. The discussion was carried out far beyond the 17 organisations of the network to foster dialogue with decision-makers (on the local, national, and regional levels in the Western Balkans and on the European level within the EU institutions), as well as civil society representatives, activists, higher education institutes, the media, and the wider public. The network served as a catalyst, a discussion and exchange platform, and a knowledge disseminator. Thus, the network actively included various civic bottom-up initiatives able to enrich and foster democracy and Europeanisation in the region.

Beyond the provision of concrete analyses and policy recommendations, the creation of tangible visions for the Western Balkan countries and for the citizens of this region was a central goal of the project. Having a network able to support and work on the European and democratic vision for the Western Balkans in times of multiple challenges to EU enlargement, both internally within the countries and on a geopolitical level, was and remains vital for the success of the region. The rising influence of other geopolitical players, such as Russia, China, Turkey, and some Arab states, has raised awareness among enlargement supporters that the EU and the West are no longer the one and only international players and sole role models for the development of the region. As other powers increasingly use the Western Balkans to promote their interests, which are not rooted in democratic practices, it becomes clear that a vision of free, democratic, and open European Balkans is not self-evident. Moreover, there is a need to fight for it, to work on it as hard as possible, and to promote it both in the region and in the EU. This is why this particular network has further increased its relevance over the course of the last three years, thus seeking to not only influence but also co-shape the European vision in the region, and plans to continue cooperation in this sense.

Another focus was placed on the involvement of as many young researchers and civic activists as possible. Each organisation nominated at least one junior researcher to work on the project and active young civic activists and researchers, as well as students, for participation in “Ideas go public Labs” and the “Summer School”. This led to 1) an increased interest and understanding of the topic of Europeanisation and democracy in the Western Balkans among young researchers and better opportunities to carry out specific research on the subject for young researchers; 2) new ties and networks between (young) researchers and civic activists to raise mutual understanding for democracy and Europeanisation; 3) new ways of influencing public debates through qualified, evidence-based, and yet politically engaged activities; and 4) increased opportunities in terms of employability and career development.

Dissemination activities:

- Project website: www.wb2eu.eu (9,397 total visits all time)
- 21 op-eds
- 31 videos
- 48 newsletters (265,335 total outreach)
- 356 postings on YouTube, Twitter and X, Instagram, and Facebook (357,072 total outreach)

The Centre for Contemporary Politics (CSP) has provided media support to the project through its European Western Balkans web portal (EWB) and published 66 articles. Articles published on EWB were also published on EWB’s social networks. The total readership of all the articles amounts to a total of 17,007 views.

Events

Western Balkans 2 EU: Kick_Off Conference, 23-24 March 2021

The Livestream WB2EU Kick_Off Event served a trifold purpose:

1. To get fresh and unexpected insights into the topic of the rule of law and justice by engaging with experts
2. To have an intensive internal debate about the content and direction of the Policy Briefs for the first phase of the project
3. To have an exchange with political stakeholders and start building an academia-policy-politics alliance around the project

1st Ideas go public Lab, 7-9 June & 30 June 2021

The WB2EU 1st Ideas go public Lab was an online event and took a closer look into the state of play of rule of law, judiciary, and fundamental rights reforms in Bosnia and Herzegovina, both from the perspective of the EU, the wider region, and the citizens of the country.

2nd Ideas go public Lab, 14-15 October 2021

The WB2EU 2nd Ideas go public Lab in Ljubljana served the purpose:

1. To discuss Eurosceptic and illiberal alliances in the region
2. To have an intensive debate about rule of law and justice and EU enlargement
3. To present Policy Briefs for project phase I rule of law and justice, and to discuss the Policy Briefs for phase II social dimension
4. To have an exchange with political stakeholders and to further establish an academia-policy-politics alliance around the project

3rd Ideas go public Lab, 17-18 February 2022

The WB2EU 3rd Ideas go public Lab in Pristina served the following purpose:

1. To have an intensive debate about the situation and future of young people in Kosovo and the Western Balkan region, and the social dimension of EU enlargement, etc.

2. To discuss the Policy Briefs of phase II social dimension
3. To have an exchange with political stakeholders and further establish an academia-policy-politics alliance around the project

4th Ideas go public Lab, 19-20 May 2022

The WB2EU 4th Ideas go public Lab in Paris served the following purpose:

1. To have an intensive debate about the general politics of enlargement in France and the EU's enlargement goals and processes
2. To reflect on what the latest developments in Europe mean for the Balkans' path into the EU
3. To have an exchange with political stakeholders and further establish an academia-policy-politics alliance around the project
4. Debriefing, discussion, and reflecting on the WB2EU Network's next steps

WB2EU Summer School, 5-9 September 2022

As part of the WB2EU project, a Summer School was designed and organised in September 2022 at the premises of the University of Rijeka on the island of Cres in Croatia. It was a very positive experience, out of which a further network of 17 young experts from 13 different countries has established itself. A tangible outcome of these seven days was a joint op-ed, which the group had worked on. Additionally, 21 videos were published with statements by all participants and some of the speakers.

5th Ideas go public Lab, 19-20 September 2022

The WB2EU 5th Ideas go public Lab in Belgrade served the following purpose:

1. To discuss inequality in the Western Balkans and the situation of young people in the labour market and education
2. To have an exchange with political stakeholders and further establish an academia-policy-politics alliance around the project
3. Debriefing, discussion, and reflecting on the WB2EU Network's next steps

6th Ideas go public Lab, 23-24 March 2023

The 6th Ideas go public Lab took off with an expert roundtable, where Berlin-based experts and representatives of the WB2EU network discussed the Berlin Process and Germany's role in the Western Balkans and was followed by a public panel discussion.

Closing Event, 9-10 October 2023

At the conclusion of the three-year Erasmus+ Jean Monnet Network project on Europeanisation, democratisation and strengthening of civil society in the Western Balkans, on the one hand, the importance of the project and the collaboration among 17 independent policy research institutes and academic institutions from 16 countries were highlighted. On the other hand, the most important results and outputs were presented to the media and the broader public. Thus, the event gathered leaders, academics, and experts from the Western Balkan countries and across Europe in Vienna and served as a platform for debating current developments, obstacles, and perspectives of the EU enlargement and reform process and the critical role of regional cooperation among the Western Balkan countries in their journey towards European integration.

Finally, in a WB2EU Network meeting, the three-year cooperation and the results of the project were discussed, as well as further steps and future collaboration ideas.

45 Policy Briefs in the framework of the WB2EU Project

All partner organisations produced 15 Policy Briefs in each of the three project phases:

I Rule of law and justice / II Social dimension / III Democratisation from below

The network partners from the Western Balkans provided a national perspective on the project phases. The neighbouring countries (Croatia, Slovenia, Greece, Hungary, Bulgaria, and Rumania) offered insights into the (trans)regional dimension of the topic, while the Policy Briefs from important EU member states for the process (France, Germany, and Italy) tackled the topic from the perspective of the EU institutions (European Commission, European Parliament, and EU Council) and member states.

1. The first series of 15 Policy Briefs was published between 23 September 2021 and 9 March 2022.
2. The second series of 15 Policy Briefs was published between 13 October 2022 and 5 May 2023.
3. The last series of 15 Policy Briefs was published between 7 June and 28 October 2023.

Final Publication

“Vision Western Balkans 2030 – Europeanisation meets democracy”

Despite 15 contributions by the WB2EU Network members, the “Final Publication” comprises selected op-eds by the WB2EU Network and the Network’s Next Generation Summer School participants. In addition, one article describes the WB2EU project and the network, and another one outlines the results and highlights of the project.

Partnerships and collaborations

New or extended partnerships or cooperation

The Centre for Contemporary Politics (CSP) has provided media support in the framework of media cooperation for the WB2EU project through its European Western Balkans web portal (EWB) from March 2021 to October 2023.

The Faculty of Social Sciences of the University of Ljubljana and the Europe for Citizens Project "Tackling Illiberal/Eurosceptic Narratives from Below" were cooperation partners at the WB2EU 3rd Ideas go public Lab (Ljubljana, 2021).

The Center for Advanced Studies Southeast Europe (CAS SEE), University of Rijeka, and Moise Palace were cooperation partners in the framework of the WB2EU Summer School (Cres, 2022).

The Representation of the European Commission in Germany and the Federal Foreign Office supported the WB2EU 6th Ideas go public Lab (Berlin, 2023).

The Representation of the European Commission in Austria and "Europa Club" were cooperation partners at the WB2EU Closing Event.

WB2EU Kick_Off Conference | 23 March 2021

Summary Panel 1

New perspectives on rule of law and justice – Where do we stand and what do we need?

The WB2EU is dedicated to bringing the countries of the Western Balkans closer to the European Union by fostering analyses and discussions. Each year is focused on one political challenge in the region. Starting off with “the rule of law and justice”, followed by “social dimension” and concluded by “democratisation from below”, WB2EU aimed at providing impetus for progress on both sides based on the observation that the status quo is unsatisfactory.

The project was kicked-off by a panel conference on the question “New perspectives on rule of law and justice – Where do we stand and what do we need?”.

Márta Pardavi, co-chair of the Hungarian Helsinki Committee, outlined the developments of the most evident case of democratic backsliding within the EU-27 and its effects on the governments of the Western Balkans, which seem to, at least partially, imitate Hungary’s authoritarian practices. Referring to the EC’s recently published report of the last monitoring cycle, Pardavi stated three important areas that are additionally to be looked at when it comes to the assessment of rule-of-law developments:

- 1) Although the EC’s monitoring cycle reports are very comprehensive, they highlight certain trends extensively while overlooking others. Pardavi calls for an extension of the monitored areas, explicitly emphasising the exertion of influence by, in this case, the Hungarian regime on the electorate through social media campaigns that were not sufficiently noted in the report.

- 2) Strategic litigation and possible judicial weaknesses should be investigated more extensively; disregards of ECJ verdicts should be called out;
- 3) The chilling effects of governments violating rule-of-law standards on political participation and the general ability to take part in discursive processes in civil society should be investigated. According to Pardavi, civic bottom-up mobilisation has to be strengthened in order to tackle issues of missing rule-of-law compliance.

Nedim Hogić, PhD candidate at the Sant' Anna School of Advanced Studies, called for deconstructing the narrative of a universal rule-of-law culture and a reconstruction of the concept along the lines of fairness, justice, and transparency. EU-enforced solutions, like judicial councils or having parties reveal their funding, did not work because they focused on this narrative. However, there are incentives coming from within the countries' established rule-of-law systems that try to promote improvements, which allows for a more optimistic view of the status quo. In every country of the Western Balkans, there are examples of mechanisms of corruption being dismantled through judicial acts and whistle-blower reports, which, in his view, testifies to the observation that there is a shift in rule-of-law culture within the political structures. Therefore, the EU-27 should focus on strengthening the building of a rule-of-law constituency rather than insisting on standards and benchmarks, following a pathway that consists of:

- 1) promoting awareness of the negative impacts of corruption on welfare systems among civil society;
- 2) focusing on strengthening those parts of the judiciary that are willing to fight corruption;
- 3) changing its take on credit allocation; money should be lent to private companies rather than the public sector in exchange for rule-of-law compliance and upholding certain standards in order to reward those that play by the rules;
- 4) protecting individuals who try to uncover corrupt mechanisms, demonstrating that rule-of-law compliance is worth establishing and that its protection is acknowledged by the EU-27.

Nikolaos Tzifakis, Associate Professor of Political Science and International Relations at the University of the Peloponnese, outlined the most recent rule-of-law developments in the Western Balkans in light of the pandemic. Tzifakis identified authoritarian trends in the region that showed extensive legislative fragilities, raising the question of a possible response by the EU-27 within the enlargement process. On numerous occasions, governments were able to take extraordinary measures without parliamentary approval and ignored the checks and balances mechanism. During short periods of time, the governments of Albania, Serbia, and Montenegro ruled by decrees and disregarded the verdicts of their constitutional courts, harming human rights and side-lining oppositions. According to Tzifakis the developments are especially alarming as the most aggressive violations were conducted against the three enlargement candidates, who were until then considered to be the frontrunners of the region when it came to compliance with EU standards, whereas Bosnia and Kosovo performed much better. In his view, the democratic backsliding to instrumentalise the crisis by the governments of Albania, Serbia, and Montenegro should not remain unanswered by the EU-27.

WB2EU Kick_Off Conference | 24 March 2021

Summary Panel 2

How to get EU enlargement back on track? Prioritising rule of law and judicial reform.

The second panel of the WB2EU kick-off conference was intended to capture the opinions of political stakeholders on the status quo of reforms in terms of the rule-of-law concept and its importance in the accession processes.

Karoline Edtstadler, Federal Minister for EU and Constitutional Affairs of Austria, calls for a more dedicated political approach from the EU-27, raising awareness of what is at stake with players like China and Russia expanding their influences in the region. According to her, a new peak was reached during the pandemic when EU member states only penuriously shared health supplies with the Western Balkans, whereas China rapidly delivered large amounts. It is now a matter of time for the EU-27 to give a clear and positive accession perspective to the Western Balkans; otherwise, they will turn away looking for partnerships with China and Russia. This would be a great loss for the EU-27, not only due to the Western Balkans cultural and physical proximity but also in terms of shared security interests.

Nikola Dimitrov, Deputy Prime Minister for European Affairs of North Macedonia, highlighted North Macedonia's ongoing efforts to implement and align with the standards demanded by the EU-27 which are based on its citizens' unbroken will to become a part of the union. He stated that it is not of interest to the people of candidate countries or potential candidate countries to only formally access the EU, they want to achieve European standards and establish a certain way of living in their region. According to him, the biggest challenge is acknowledging that there is no universal solution to establish a rule-of-law culture that fits every country. Nevertheless, he observes a positive trend of elite responsiveness to the public's opinions on the verge.

Katarina Barley, Vice President of the European Parliament, states that the EU-27 should focus on making the rule-of-law concept more tangible rather than demanding aligned institutionalisation of the rule-of-law principle in every member state and potential member state. It should be made clear, that the rule-of-law principle is, in its core, the capacity of governments to be criticised and called out whenever they make mistakes. It is not about the structure of constitutional courts or single litigations but about whether or not governments in power take democracy seriously by promoting and ensuring mechanisms of checks and balances.

Jovana Marović, Executive Director of the Politikon Network in Montenegro, contextualised the developments of the past few years in the Western Balkans. She observed a positive trend towards the strengthening of rule-of-law cultures, at least in some countries of the region. In her view, the EU's approach to fostering the rule-of-law principle in candidate and potential candidate countries should be adjusted to the specific characteristics of the respective countries. It should be established along the lines of EU-27 supported democracy building in the Western Balkans.

WB2EU: Citizens need some re-branding of the idea of what the rule of law is

by EWB 24. 03. 2021.

Democracies are under pressure, the rule of law in the Western Balkans and some EU countries has weakened and the current health and economic crises further complicate the search for renewed energies and optimism. This was a conclusion of the panel “New perspectives on rule of law and justice – Where do we stand and what do we need”, organised by the “WB2EU network”.

Marta Pardavi, Co-Chair of the Hungarian Helsinki Committee, said that rule of law is a very important European topic and the very top political priority, adding that for a very long time this was not a topic in Hungary.

She underlined that without a good framework and strong constitutional framework, the rule of law is a human right that can not be implemented.

“In Hungary, we had bad practices 10 years ago. We have moved from recognizing problems, we need a solution”, she told adding that Hungary is the classic example of a democratic backsliding.

She identified problems in rule of law in Hungary, which are linked with the problems in the countries of the Western Balkans.

Nedim Hogić, PhD Candidate Sant’ Anna School of Advanced Studies, pointed out that insisting on the non-existence of a culture of the rule of law in the Western Balkans is dangerous, adding that it is necessary to explain to the citizens the advantages of the rule of law.

“We need to focus on mobilizing citizens and explaining to them the benefits of the rule of law” he said.

According to him, it is necessary to put a greater focus on issues of justice and transparency.

Panelists agreed that citizens need some re-branding of the idea of what the rule of law is because the language of the rule of law is sometimes very technical. According to them, citizens need a much better explanation of the rule of law.

The panel was organized within the “WB2EU network” is a long-term project gathering 17 think tanks and academic institutions from the Western Balkans and the EU and lasting until 2023.

The project aims to establish “WB2EU network”, which shall become a reference point in the area of EU enlargement and democratisation efforts to the Western Balkan countries.

The network will focus on gathering information and research results on EU enlargement, supporting civic democratic engagement through the publication of a series of policy briefs and op-eds in major media outlets in all partner countries and fostering cooperation and creating a high knowledge exchange platform with public actors.

WB2EU: Status quo is no longer providing stability in the WB

by EWB 25. 03. 2021.

Status quo is no longer providing stability in the Western Balkans. The EU should focus more on small victories in order to gain long-term goals, it was concluded during the panel “How to get EU enlargement back on track? Prioritising rule of law and judicial reform”, organised by the “WB2EU network”.

Nikola Dimitrov, Deputy Prime Minister for European Affairs of North Macedonia, said that many years ago the enlargement process resembled the highway, then it became small, now it is very tiny and it is uphill.

„The goal of the accession process is not to tick of boxes, but to bring Europe at home, so that we here can have the European way of life. There is no magical stick on the rule of law. This year we mark 20 years since we signed the Stabilisation and Association Agreement and we mark 16 years as a candidate country. All this waiting time is very challenging,” said Dimitrov.

He added that there is an issue with credibility on the part of the EU.

“„I think this reflects not only in our case, but lessons are being learned in the capitols of the Western Balkans. We are talking about the region that does not simply border the EU, it is encircled with the blue flag with yellow stars. However, I think that the region is also behind on the delivery of the reforms. We have to make this region properly European in terms of the values of Europe,” Dimitrov pointed out.

Karoline Edtstadler, Federal Minister for EU and Constitution of Austria, said that she does not see the current situation regarding the enlargement process as negative.

„I think we achieved a lot last year. We were already in the middle of this pandemic when we decided to go further with the enlargement process. It is a question of credibility and security for the EU that we bring the Western Balkans closer to the EU with the goal of membership in the EU,” Edtstadler highlighted.

She added that the EU needs a more political, strategic approach to the EU enlargement process and that a clear perspective should be given to the Western Balkans.

Katarina Barley, Vice President of the European Parliament, stressed that the European Parliament has always been extremely clear and has always taken a side for the accession countries in all of the disputes.

“„I think we have to really put this into a bigger picture, because the frustration of the accession countries is a part of the process that does not only concerns the accession process, we are witnessing developments within the EU that are extremely worrying and also frustrating to some of us,” said Barley.

She underlined that when you make promises you have to keep them.

„Once you raise expectations you have to meet them. What we have seen especially with North Macedonia and Albania is that the EU has not raised to these expectations and it has not kept the promises that it made. The European Parliament works as much as it can to support the accession process”, stressed Barley.

Jovana Marović, Executive Director of Politikon Network in Montenegro, said that it is obvious that the Western Balkans’ perspective of the enlargement process is different than the EU’s.

Energy transition and accession to the EU: „Fundamentals first” principle’s application in energy transition in the Western Balkans

„I think that the two most important questions about the EU enlargement are whether the EU is still interested to help with the democratisation of the Western Balkans and is there anything left of the EU transformative power”, Marović pointed out.

Without a clear vision of where the enlargement process is leading, she said, and without engagement from the EU level, I do not see that we will achieve a certain level of democratisation in the meantime.

Barley added that “we as a European Union should not tell neither member states nor accession countries what exactly they have to do, because that is not the way it works, as we can see in Poland and Hungary”.

“„The question is do you accept that separation of powers, the rule of law and democracy means that you as a government are being controlled and that you are being criticized”, Barley concluded.

The panel was organized within the “WB2EU network” is a long-term project gathering 17 think tanks and academic institutions from the Western Balkans and the EU and lasting until 2023.

The project aims to establish “WB2EU network”, which shall become a reference point in the area of EU enlargement and democratisation efforts to the Western Balkan countries.

PART II

June 30, 17.00–18.00: Panel Discussion (Livestream) Moving forward or standing still? New momentum for the European future of Bosnia and Herzegovina Reform processes focusing on rule of law, judiciary and fundamental rights build the cornerstone of the EU enlargement of the Western Balkans. The EU enlargement is in dire need of new momentum, yet rule of law, justice and fundamental right reforms do not seem to be of utmost priority to the governments in the region. Is there a way to move forward and create new dynamics by seriously addressing rule of law issues, or will insisting on these reforms turn out to be a good excuse from both sides and a stumbling block for the European path of the region? These issues and dilemmas are particularly virulent in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The panel will take a closer look into the state of play of rule of law, judiciary and fundamental rights reforms in Bosnia, both from the perspective of the EU, the wider region as well as from the citizens in the country. Will Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Western Balkans continue to stand still in terms of EU integration or start to move forward?

Rule of law and fundamental rights are not top priorities for governments in the region

by EWB 01. 07. 2021.

VIENNA – There is no new momentum for the European future of the Western Balkan countries which for all these years have not moved much forward, and the EU membership slowly turned to EU perspective, it is concluded at the panel discussion “Moving forward or standing still? New momentum for the European future of Bosnia and Herzegovina”, organised by the “WB2EU network”.

Considering that the rule of law, justice and fundamental right reforms do not seem to be of utmost priority to the governments in the region, the aim of the panel was to answer the question is there a way to move forward and create new dynamics by seriously addressing these issues.

The panelists discussed will Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Western Balkans continue to stand still in terms of EU integration or start to move forward and questioned the role of the citizens and NGO’s in the process.

Johann Sattler, Head of EU Delegation and Special Representative in Bosnia and Herzegovina said that considering the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina in the past two years, this country is hardly moving forward on its European path.

“If you ask me if Bosnia and Herzegovina is moving forward or is it standing still, I would have to say that it is standing still. 2/3 standing still and 1/3 or even less of movement”, he said.

Sattler explained that in the area of rule of law, the lack of progress is noted. Although some steps have been taken, such as adoption of the public procurement law by the Council of ministers which he hopes will be adopted in the near future, there is still many things that must be done. The most important are constitutional and electoral reform.

“2021 is a year to make a constitutional and electoral reform. Here it is basically about two things. One getting the discrimination out of the constitution and out of the election law. The second part is to get the corruption out of the election system”, he stated adding that in that process civil society organisations must be included.

Senada Šelo Šabić, Senior Research Associate at the Institute for Development and International Relations in Croatia, WB2EU network pointed out that Bosnia and Herzegovina in order to become a member of the European Union must respect the system that other member states have and that it must be strongly and openly committed to that goal.

“That is the main principle. You need to assure a strong democracy, strong institution, basically blind institutions to the faith, race, ethnic background, sexual orientation or whatever is a particular characteristic of a person”, she highlighted.

She added that to achieve that the experts in BiH should be more focused on its advantages.

“Everybody involved in the processes of this country must be more ambitious and positive while explaining the possibilities of BiH, rather than its limitations”, she said.

Marko Savković, Executive Director of Belgrade Fund for the Political Excellence, WB2EU network referred to the long duration of the WB European integration process and its complex nature which sometimes can be discouraging. Accordingly, he was not much optimistic when it comes to the EU membership of the Western Balkan countries in the near future.

“I don’t see a new momentum for the European future of the Western Balkans. EU membership has been returned into European perspective”, he noted adding that a positive thing can be a demand for democratization by the citizens.

Savković explained that the situation in Serbia is very difficult considering the lack of legal opposition and the fact that reforms which are being implemented as the most important for Serbia to become a member of the Union, are leading to even more state capture. Thus, membership remains far away.

“In some respect, we are still candidates for EU membership, but in other, we talk about what is plan B, if there is no enlargement”, he said.

Emina Veljović, Executive Director of Aarhus Centre in BiH explained the role of civil society in the integration process of BiH. Through an example of action in the field of environment, she showed how the civil sector managed to put the problem on the agenda and then motivated institutions to actually do something in order to harmonise the legislation with EU standards.

“We were able to pull off the draw of the Parliament the Draft of the Law on the environment. Then the civic sector in the area of an environment prepared the amendment for the Law to be harmonised with EU legislation and we constantly communicated with delegates and suggested that amendments should become a part of the Draft Law” she said and concluded that that is not the end since they continue to push reforms and inspire changes in BiH.

The panel was organized within the “WB2EU network” is a long-term project gathering 17 think tanks and academic institutions from the Western Balkans and the EU and lasting until 2023.

The project aims to establish “WB2EU network”, which shall become a reference point in the area of EU enlargement and democratisation efforts to the Western Balkan countries.

Public debate in hybrid format with livestream

For a long time, the Central and East European new member states, such as Slovenia, were a symbol of successful Europeanisation and of the strength of the enlargement policy as the most important foreign policy tool of the European Union. In the last decade, they have taken a central role in the divide over fundamental norms and rules such as independent judiciary, media, and civil society, thus ultimately playing in favour of the enlargement fatigue in Western Europe.

The public debate will, among others, address the following questions:

- What did Ursula Von der Leyen's tour in September tell about the reformed enlargement policy being up to the institutional and geopolitical challenges in the region?
- How will the German elections impact the rule of law and enlargement policy?
- What is the climate in the European Council as seen from the outcome of the informal EU-Western Balkans Summit? How prominently figure here the questions of the rule of law and the lack of reforms in this sector?
- Are multi-ethnic countries such as Bosnia and Herzegovina, Kosovo, and North Macedonia losing their ground vis-à-vis the strongmen and growing nationalisms in the region? How will this impact the reform impetus?
- Are we witnessing a re-emergence of ethnic conflicts as a result of the weakening of the multilateral normative framework?

It is in Slovenia's interest to promote geopolitical importance of the Western Balkans

by EWB 13. 10. 2021.

Josep Borrell, Janez Janša and Charles Michel in Brdo, Slovenia; Photo: Flickr / Slovenian Presidency of the Council of the EU

VIENNA – The Western Balkans is perhaps Slovenia's most important strategic region. A next round of EU enlargement would therefore bring immense benefits to Slovenia in terms of trade, investment, political stability and security in the region, emphasise the authors of a policy brief published by Austrian Institute for International Affairs (OiiP).

The brief, titled “What can the Slovenian Presidency of the Council of the European Union do for the Western Balkans?” stresses that, after the various EU as well as domestic crises, Slovenia became less of a political actor in the WB. Still, it continues to enjoy a relatively positive image in the Western Balkans and is in the position to share its valuable experience with EU accession.

The authors recommended, primarily in the context of the recently held EU-Western Balkans Summit, that the Slovenian Presidency should promote the geopolitical importance of the region for the EU amidst the enlargement fatigue, promote the new investment plan as an economic backbone for the “Open Balkan” initiative. Also, to prove critics wrong, the Slovenian government should promote a positive narrative on the EU-Western Balkans relations and raise awareness regarding the negative prospects for the whole region due to Bulgaria's veto to North Macedonia.

In addition, certain priorities of the Slovenian Presidency of the Council of the European Union, such as resilience to health crisis and cybersecurity, that have gained in importance during the COVID-19 pandemic, go hand in hand with the EU's strategy on WB, the authors assessed. The same goes for the issue of migration.

"One of the specific trajectories that goes hand in hand with the question of mobility, economic migration and broader security paradigm is the question of the illegal migration, as the 2015/2016 Balkan route showed how ineffective policies can be if countries do not work together. In this context – and in line with the new types of uncertainties deriving from the withdrawal of the U.S. from Afghanistan – Slovenia could exploit further the EU Council presidency and pursue the idea of working together regionally in order to manage the regional borders and control illegal immigration", the paper reads.

The non-paper controversy: Sign that geopolitical challenges persist

The SDS-led government in Slovenia, which took office in early 2020, highlighted geopolitical challenges from countries such as China and Turkey. However, it also aligned with the Donald Trump administration, the illiberal regimes of Fidesz in Hungary and PiS in Poland, Aleksandar Vučić in Serbia and Milorad Dodik in the Republic Srbska, the authors stress.

"This was the context in which the non-paper on the "Plan B" for the WB proposing new borders in the region along ethnic lines was published in April and was attributed to Slovenia", the policy brief reads, reminding that the government denied having anything to do with it.

According to the authors, the non-paper probably did not intend to actually change the borders since this would go against the development of norms and rules since the Second World War and would most probably trigger new conflicts.

"Nevertheless, by supporting the ideas of ethnic borders and of Great Serbia, Great Albania and Great Croatia it assisted nationalist status quo players in those countries, who also enjoy support of third countries. In contrast, it further pressured the multinational states, such as Bosnia and Herzegovina, Kosovo and North Macedonia, where support for the EU is currently the strongest", the paper reads.

It reminds that the criticism against the non-paper was fierce in the Atlantic community.

“The new US administration under Joe Biden specifically threatened any actors that would attempt to destabilise the Western Balkans with sanctions. The other reactions from Russia, Turkey together with another non-paper from Zagreb (the latter which Slovenia officially supported called for a stronger role of (Bosnian) Croats in Bosnia and Herzegovina), show that geopolitical challenges persist”, the paper reads.

EU losing its transformative power, Slovenia no longer the best example of transition

“In the last 10 years there has been a growing impression that the EU has lost its transformative powers. The weakening of the pull and push powers for the integration have been explained in terms of the triple C crisis: weakened Conditionality, Credibility loss and higher Costs to domestic elites”, the brief reads.

Slovenia was also heavily affected by the various crises and is no longer the lighthouse of transition to the liberal democracy and Europeanisation for the region it used to be, the brief also analysed.

“The government led by Janez Jansša of the Slovenian Democratic Party (SDS) that presided the Council of the EU back in 2008 recently used the fight against COVID-19 as pretext to interfere with the independent state institutions and free media and further align with illiberal regimes in the region and beyond resulting in tensions with the EU institutions”, the authors stress.

They add that democratic backsliding in the candidate and potential candidate countries and some of the new EU members from the CEE (including Slovenia) have strengthened the need of enhanced conditionality, potentially extended beyond accession and including member states conditionality in terms of rule of law

The Policy Brief is published in the framework of the WB2EU Project, which aims at the establishment of a network of renowned think-thanks, universities, higher education institutes, and policy centers in the Western Balkans, neighboring countries, and EU member states that will be most decisive for the enlargement process and Europeanisation of the region in the upcoming years.

A short clip of an internationally awarded Kosovo short movie screening is followed by a discussion around the following questions:

- What mechanisms exist for the participation of young people in Kosovo? What about in other Western Balkan countries? Any best practices? How can they be improved, and how can decision-making be made more inclusive for young people?
- How can institutions provide a more favourable environment for young people in Kosovo and support them to achieve their maximum potential?
- What are the top three priority areas that can be improved with immediately available resources? What is the longer-term strategy?
- What role should civil society have? Advocacy? Or direct interventions?
- How can the EU contribute to empowering youth in the Western Balkans beyond promises of enlargement and demands of youth-friendly strategies?

Youth participation and culture are important for the Europeanisation and democratization of Kosovo

by EWB 21. 02. 2022.

Pristina, Kosovo; Photo: European Union

PRISTINA – Participation of youth in creating policies and culture plays a significant role in the Europeanization and democratization of Kosovo, but young people and citizens must be heard by politicians, stressed the participants during the panel “Succeeding despite – The challenges of young Europeans”, organized by WB2EU network.

Editor in Chief of Kosovo 2.0 Besa Luci spoke about the experience of this portal, whose second-largest group of readers are young people in Kosovo. They have the opportunity to write various blogs on the Kosovo 2.0 portal about topics that concern them.

“A lot of issues that they are bringing up in this blog are really the issues that are actually faced by the society at large and it really made me think about how we think of youth and how we talk of youth, because in a lot of these blogs, what was distinct for me was that there were all written from a very personal experience that they went through,” says Luci.

According to Luci, there are sometimes there is a tendency to think of youth as this like one group where age becomes a common denominator.

“Of course, age is important because it allows a lot of sharing of similar experiences but I would like the conversation to youth to go to the next stage, when we talk about youth as citizens and not through their age marker because I think it also ends up stripping them away from their agency as well,” says Luci.

She stressed the importance of talking about fundamental and women’s rights, about LGBT rights, “about how different groups experience poverty and how different identity markers affect that as well”.

“When we think of democracy we tend to talk about freedom of expression, and we really think of the right of freedom of expression and the right to be listened to. I think this is important today, the right to be listened to, not just the right to speak. I think this applies to youth,” says Luci.

Mimoza Kusari Lila, Member of the Parliament of the Republic of Kosovo, said that the government should take great responsibility and deliver concrete steps in fighting corruption, justice, education.

She assessed that people need to be told, need to actually hear it constantly.

“Today, there has been for the first time in Kosovo a lot of implementation of the policies that they have promised including free university education, including scholarships for minorities, funding the start up. However, in this line of work, I think it needs more intensified communication with people. Because from being a political party that has started and grown from a grassroots and had been close to the people to a party that is governing based on its principles and promises. We need to communicate that”, said Kusari-Lila.

Eroll Bilibani, Producer / Head, Dokufest, Kosovo, spoke about the importance of cultural festivals, such as Dokufest, for the promotion of Kosovo, both externally and internally.

Dokufest has created this flavor that is known in Kosovo as a Dokufest spirit, but its journey was not that easy. Culture in Kosovo was financed through subsidies, once a year both at local and central level. The influence of culture on social economic development and potential was never recognized. It was seen as an activity that is entertainment to those who create it and those who experience it, “says Bilibani.

He told that Dokufest has increased economic activity, GDP in the amount of over 2.4 million euros and if consumption expenditures are included the annual impact is estimated to be over 4.7 million euros.

According to Bilibani, Dokufest has played a role in building the new history of Kosovo by creating an alternative space in which young people could learn, create and collaborate with others.

“This confirmed that culture is beyond entertainment for us that make and those to consume it. Dokufest and some other CSOs did the opposite of locked door policies. We gave opportunities, we didn’t considered youth as beneficiaries, they were our partners, their ideas they were always... if they had a good idea, they would go for that and we would help them “, he said.

The panel was organized within the WB2EU network, a long-term project gathering 17 think tanks and academic institutions from the Western Balkans and the EU until 2023. The project aims to establish a network that shall become a reference point in the area of EU enlargement and democratization efforts to the Western Balkan countries. The network will focus on gathering information and research results on EU enlargement, supporting civic democratic engagement through the publication of a series of policy briefs and op-eds in major media outlets in all partner countries and fostering cooperation and creating a high knowledge exchange platform with public actors.

4th Ideas go public Lab Paris, 19 – 20 May 2022

Right in between the tail of the presidential race and the head of the parliamentary elections, the WB2EU 4th Ideas go public Lab will focus on the general politics of enlargement in France. The Russian aggression on Ukraine has rekindled a movement of solidarity and mobilisation akin to those of 1956 for Hungary, 1968 for Prague, or the 1980s for Poland. The reconfirmation for Ukraine of its European destiny in the face of war and its domino effect on Georgia and Moldova triggered a refreshed interest in the French public and political spectrum for the EU's enlargement goals and processes. In this regard, we found it relevant to reflect on what this novel context could mean for the Balkans' path into the EU. And the associated political narratives and plays.

Following the usual pattern, the Ideas go public Lab will have an afternoon specialist round table, an evening public event – followed by a formal get together – and a WB2EU Network meeting for debriefing and reflecting on the next steps in the framework of the project.

So, the WB2EU 4th Ideas go public Lab will serve the following purpose:

- To have an intensive debate about the general politics of enlargement in France and the EU's enlargement goals and processes
- To reflect on what the latest developments in Europe mean for the Balkans' path into the EU
- To have an exchange with political stakeholders and further establish an academia-policy-politics alliance around the project
- Debriefing, discussion, and reflecting on the WB2EU Network's next steps

WB2EU discussion: The EU has a huge responsibility in the Western Balkans

by EWB 25. 05. 2022.

PARIS – The citizens of the Western Balkans deserve to live in societies where the rule of law and the fight against corruption function, and that is why the region needs a credible perspective on the road to the European Union, the conference said. on the politics of EU enlargement in France.

The event gathered experts from the Western Balkans and the EU countries and discussed what the novel context in Europe could mean for the Balkans' path into the EU.

Tineke Strik, Member of the European Parliament, said that the Western Balkans need more active and sustainable support from the European Union for certain reforms.

„The EU has a huge responsibility for the enlargement process. We must be credible partners in the Western Balkans if we want to integrate them into the European Union“, Strik told adding that such perspective was lacking.

„North Macedonia and Albania are waiting, although they have met all the criteria, and the EU still refuses to open accession negotiations. The disappointment in the region is huge and this is an opportunity for the EU to improve the situation“, said Tineke Strik.

She underlined that some countries in the region support regime of the Kremlin, which undermines the unity of Europe. Strik added that even after 20 years of stabilization and democratization process, in some countries, such as BiH, there is still an ethnic-nationalistic division with a high level of corruption.

Gwendolin Delbos-Corfield, a member of the European Parliament from France assessed that Europe is in a specific momentum and that the EU should be clearer when it comes to the Western Balkans region.

She assessed that not much is known about the Balkans in some member states, except for the part of history that refers to the wars from the end of the 1990s.

According to Delbos-Corfield, the focus on the enlargement process should remain on the rule of law, but the future of the European Union is in the Balkans.

Oana Popescu-Zamfir, Director of GlobalFocus Center from Bucharest, emphasized that Europe is in competition with two blocs and that in such a situation, the enlargement process must remain based on common values and principles.

“The EU enlargement process must be seen as a process of converging values and norms. Geopolitics and values go hand in hand,” said Popescu-Zamfir.

She referred to the experiences of Bulgaria and Romania in the process of joining the European Union and assessed that the two countries were not completely ready when they joined the EU. Following the example of Bulgaria and Romania, the rule of law, the judiciary, and the fight against corruption must remain the focus of the enlargement process.

The Russia-Ukraine war must be the impetus for a new EU enlargement and neighbourhood policy

EU enlargement has stalled since the accession of Croatia in 2013, Vedran Džihić and Paul Schmidt argue that following Russia’s invasion of Ukraine, it is time for the EU to reassess how its enlargement and neighbourhood policies can respond to the new realities faced by Europe.

In an op-ed, they said that Ukraine is pushing for a clear European perspective, rightly arguing that the country is now on the frontline in the defense of European values against Russia's invasion.

"The countries in the Western Balkans that have already lingered for far too long in the waiting room of the Union are also an important part of this geopolitical equation. Non-democratic great powers such as China and Russia represent a clear challenge to the EU and the West. This is visible in countries like Serbia, where Aleksandar Vučić continues to manoeuvre between pressure from the West to join sanctions against Russia, the supposed sympathy of large parts of the Serbian population for Putin, and his personal preference for the Chinese state model", write Džihic and Schmidt.

They explained that for years, people in the Western Balkans have been waiting for progress on EU integration.

"This has resulted in authoritarian tendencies gaining further ground in several countries across the region. The blocking of EU accession negotiations with Albania and North Macedonia has damaged the population's trust in the EU. The latest opinion polls in Serbia show that for the first time since the country's accession process started, a majority of Serbs are no longer in favour of EU membership", authors said.

According to Džihic and Schmidt, the deadlock on both sides is a major risk to political stability and that is why a more credible EU accession perspective is needed.

"It will be necessary to overcome the obstructive actions of individual member states and attempts by nationalist politicians to use the enlargement process to win concessions, as the Bulgarian government has sought to do in the case of North Macedonia. Serbian acceptance of Russian narratives on Ukraine must be strongly condemned, and there must be a strong response to the ongoing attempts to undermine the territorial integrity of Bosnia and Herzegovina", underlined Džihic and Schmidt.

They concluded that the EU is still learning how to use its considerable economic power to exert political influence, and these lessons should feed into a new and forward-looking policy stance toward the Western Balkans to avoid any destabilizing developments in the region.

WB2EU SUMMER SCHOOL

5 –9 September 2022, Cres

WB2EU - NextGeneration: Regaining new European and democratic momentum together

The "Summer School", organised in Cres (Croatia), will focus on the main topic "Researchers meeting Activists: Regaining new European and democratic momentum together".

Aims of the Summer School:

The involvement of young researchers in the project will provide them with knowledge, experience and skills relevant for their academic and professional futures.

This shall lead to

1. an increased interest and understanding of the topic of Europeanisation and democracy development in the Western Balkans among young researchers and thus better opportunities to carry out specific research on the subject for young researchers,
2. increased opportunities in terms of employability and career development,
3. new ties and networks between researchers and civic activists to raise mutual understanding for democracy and Europeanisation,
4. new ways of influencing public debates through qualified and evidence based and yet politically engaged activities.

Target group:

- 17 young scientists and active young civic activists

The participants (age max. 28 years) will be nominated by the partners (1 participant from each partner). Furthermore, a few decision-makers and stakeholders will be invited and engaged in dialogue with the young participants on the topic of Europeanisation and democratisation.

Working methods and approaches:

- Lectures, workshops with presentations and discussions of research projects and forms of civic activism
- Developing scenarios and action plans regarding the future of Europe and the Western Balkans
- Field trip
- A specific dialogue format dedicated to the meetings with stakeholders (both from Croatia as well as European Parliament)
- Preparation of a set of YouTube-videos and some live streaming sessions from the Summer School featuring main discussions

- Report of the most important results (online and social media campaigns)
- This new generation of “young influencers” will be closely involved in organising the final public event in the framework of the WB2EU project in Brussels - “Democratic activism for Europe – New Horizons” and
- in contributing to the final chapter of the final WB2EU book publication “Vision Western Balkans 2030 – Voices for the future”. This chapter will outline the visions and alternative horizons for the Europeanisation and democratic development of the region. This chapter will be first discussed and elaborated in a common thinking and writing session at the Summer School and further refined following the Summer School.

The Summer school will be also used to present and discuss results of the two-years project by Friedrich Ebert Stiftung and the Austro-French Centre for Rapprochement in Europe “The Western Balkans Discuss the Future of Europe”, which from March 2020 until March 2022 organised a series of civic-oriented debates and events in the context of the Conference on the “Future of Europe”.

Senior external experts/researchers engaged in teaching and supervising the Summer School will include: Rector of the University of Rijeka, Prof. Dr. Snježana Prijić-Samaržija, Assist. Prof. Dr. Sanja Milutinović Bojanić, Prof. Dr. Dejan Jović, Prof. Dr. Florian Bieber, Dr. Florant Marciacq, Dr. Martin Selmayr, Mag. Andreas Schieder, Tonino Picula, Juan González-Barba, members of the WB2EU network;

Working language: English

Programme:

Sunday, 4 September: Arrival, First Meeting, Dinner

Monday, 5 September: Opening Session – Welcome, Keynote Addresses, Introduction to the working methods and programme, Lunch, Creative Workshop 1, Dinner

Tuesday, 6 September: Plenary Inputs and Workshops, Lunch, Creative Workshop 2, Dinner

Wednesday, 7 September: Plenary Inputs, Lunch, Exploring the Island, Dinner

Thursday, 8 September: Future of EU – Western Balkans Manifesto – Drafting and creating a common document, Social Programme, Farewell Dinner

Friday, 9 September: Departure

Yes, EUtopia is possible!

by Group of authors 09. 11. 2022.

“Europe will be forged in crisis, and will be the sum of the solutions adopted for those crises”, Jean Monnet, founding father of the European project

While the war is raging in Ukraine, we might not even recognize what a paradoxical gift we hold in our hands, which is to live in peace. New security risks for Europe as a whole, but especially for fragile regions such as the Western Balkans, have brought the area back into international spotlight and given it a renewed chance to leave conflicts and frictions behind, thus moving towards a common European future.

The Western Balkans were torn apart by its wars in the 1990s and although the prospect of joining the European Union (EU) rose in the early 2000s, the process has proven to be unpleasantly slow. In many aspects, EU enlargement has still not achieved concrete steps towards progressive change so much needed by the people in the region, especially the youth. In consequence, the odds of joining the EU started to fade, driving national and regional Euroscepticism.

However, there will be no stability for the whole European continent without anchoring the Western Balkans firmly within the EU. We believe that the long-term guarantee for peace and prosperity is not only secured by the ink to sign treaties but based on sustainable and ever closer European cooperation for which we need a common vision – our EUtopia.

Building strong and resilient democracies

In the past years and decades, anti-democratic tendencies and the rise of far-right parties have contributed to the polarization of European societies. Their political game consists of simplifying complex problems and effortlessly offering unrealistic solutions. The ‘migration card’ has been played intensively, resulting in hate speech, the rise of discrimination as well as violations of human rights. Consequently, the Russian war against Ukraine has posed new threats to democracy. Yet, it could also sharpen our understanding of democratic values and offer a new momentum to strengthen the unity of Europe. It has become more obvious than ever: if we want to live in a pluralistic and liberal democracy, we have got to take action. Now.

Dysfunctional democracies provide fertile ground for autocrats in the Western Balkans and beyond to capture core-mechanisms of democracy such as elections, rule of law, free media, and independent institutions. Democratic backsliding, a lack of political engagement, disinformation and threats to the freedom of speech is daily reality particularly for the citizens of the region and puts us, the progressive youth, into a seemingly hopeless situation.

But we are not giving up, we feel responsible for our region and the whole of Europe and we want to push for change. We will not stand still, but rather do everything in our power to safeguard freedom of speech by actively countering disinformation both in social media and within our peer groups. By investing in our education and claiming for us the right to be listened to, we will contribute to the resilience of our society. We don't want to be mere passengers on a ship without a clear course, but rather contribute to shaping a progressive and open society based on solidarity and equality.

“ Yet, we cannot do it alone. Many more of the young people in the region – or with roots in the Balkans and living all across Europe – need to join us. We all call for being recognized and accepted as equal Europeans. Let us start by saying loud and clear that what is sold as “freedom of movement” shall be no more burden to anyone. Kosovo for example has fulfilled all the conditions for visa liberalization the EU has demanded for years. Now is the time to abolish this absurd visa regime.

We demand more institutionalized participatory processes, like the Conference on the Future of Europe – where the youth of the Western Balkans shall be an integral part of this transnational exercise. Our ideas and experiences also need to be translated into concrete political action and tangible policies.

No second-class Europeans

February 24th has put the European political landscape upside down. It is now high time to bring the Western Balkans closer to a European, progressive, and democratic future. For that, it is crucial to reiterate and further promote the common European values such as human rights, dignity, democracy, freedom, and equal opportunities.

Although many young people in the Western Balkans share these values, they are not recognized as equal Europeans. The region is often perceived as not “good” or “mature” enough to belong to the EU. This public perception runs the danger of breeding new frustrations. This feeling of exclusion becomes a reality on the labour market, in education, health and social security systems – all aspects of daily life – when the promise of liberal democracy turns into a false illusion and deception for so many of us. Intentionally or not, EU leaders treat millions of people as inferior even though they only want the same things as their counterparts fortunately to them born slightly further west: a prosperous and good life in peace and stability. This discrimination has to end.

Education and social inclusion are key in the fight for equal opportunities. That is true also within the EU where inequality between member states, take the example of Bulgaria, Croatia and Romania, is alarmingly high. While EU enlargement has taken place, integration is still lacking behind.

Second-class status is ghettoizing. If you're not given a perspective to break out of your pigeonhole, you will stop even striving for it. Western Balkan countries thus need a realistic perspective to be an integral part of the European family to make sure that they do not turn away from it– no more empty promises but equal opportunities!

Together we want to work towards our real EUtopian idea, our vision for Europe's future. Given the historic momentum Europe finds itself in, not only do we need to learn how to dream of utopias but we need to learn to actively live in them. As the Slovenian philosopher Slavoj Žižek put it, the core of pursuing this real utopian idea lies in shaping reality and opening up the space for a possible other and better future.

This OP ED was written during the WB2EU network's Next Generation Summer School by 17 young people from 13 countries on the Croatian island of Cres. It is part of a project on the future of the Western Balkans and EU enlargement, co-funded by the European Commission under its Erasmus+ Jean Monnet programme:

11.30–13.00: TACKLING INEQUALITY – A STEP TOWARDS SOLIDARITY

According to the Commitment to Reducing Inequality Index, Serbia is at the bottom of Europe and 84th on the list of 154 countries in the world. One of the causes of high inequality in Serbia is the high percentage of people who have very low work intensity. A similar state of affairs affects the entire Western Balkans region, as Albania is ranked 80th, North Macedonia 103rd, and there is no data for others. The share of these persons aged up to 60 years old in Serbia (21.2%) is much higher than the European average (10.5%) and individual EU countries. The economic insecurity is followed by a lack of social measures and respect for basic human rights for the most vulnerable groups in the Western Balkans region, such as Roma, women 45+, people with disabilities, and the LGBTI+ community.

- Can European Integration foster more solidarity within society in Western Balkans region?
- What are the mechanisms for the governments to take a more active role in tackling inequality?
- How can CSOs contribute?

15.00–16.30: MAINSTREAMING YOUTH VISION – AVOIDING YOUTHWASHING

In the Republic of Serbia, an institutional, legislative, and strategic framework aimed at young people has been developed. The position of young people, however, is often assessed as unsatisfactory, primarily due to the position of young people in the labour market but also the quality of the education system, which is the case throughout the whole WB6 region. Regarding the views of youth on the Republic of Serbia entering the EU in 2021, a historic low of 39% of young people supported Serbia joining the EU, 33% were against it, while 28% did not know.

According to the research, more than half of young people are not interested in being informed about socio-political events, while their interest in being actively involved in socio-political events is even less. The slow process and often the status quo in EU integration led to a loss of trust among youth towards the process itself, which can cause a spill-over effect in the entire WB region.

- What are the key mechanisms to involve youth in the decision-making process?
- Is there a need for a change and additions to the Law on Youth for its better efficiency?
- How to raise youth interest in socio-political events and their active participation?

WB2EU discussion: Tackling inequality a step towards solidarity

by EWB 20. 09. 2022.

BELGRADE – Citizens are major actors in democratic development, together with both governmental and external support, we are able to raise awareness of the significance of respecting basic human rights and building solidarity among each other, it was concluded at the WB2EU 5th Ideas go public Lab in Belgrade.

Brankica Janković, Commissioner for Protection of Equality of the Republic of Serbia, states that discrimination undermines social cohesion but also increases social inequalities, which represents a multi-dimensional challenge we all have to deal with.

According to Janković, in those circumstances, European Integration serves as an important guide for building social cohesion, and inclusion and combating those inequalities. She emphasizes that undertaking the necessary changes is something we do for our well-being and future and not only to fulfill the agenda of conditions that are defined as such.

When asked if the support from foreign diplomats creates a counter-effect in the society because of mainstream politics, she answered that we are “facing the notable negative trends among our citizens, who have a feeling that the EU authorities are only worried about the LGBTIQ community.

“That creates a new kind of polarization. Unfortunately, it is even easier to change the law than those already established cultural patterns,” she said adding that ambassadors and NGOs, who are pressuring local governments to allow and secure the events, are marked as spies paid by foreign governments and the media presentation is one of the greatest creators of that image.

Sofija Todorović, Programme Director of Youth Initiative for Human Rights, brings attention to the recent events during Pride week in Belgrade which showed that “the rights of the LGBT+ community could simply be abolished by the state. Its position was used to distract the public from big events that are happening on a bilateral level between Serbia and Kosovo. Resolving these issues usually goes with the price of treating vulnerable and already discriminated groups.”

Todorović assessed that the work of institutions and development should be put as a priority in the accession process instead of focusing solely on the multilateral reputation of Serbia. “It is not just about human rights, it’s the matter of preserving democracy”, added Todorović.

Sarina Bakić, Professor and researcher at the Department of Sociology at the University of Sarajevo’s Faculty of Political Science and a member of WB2EU Network, underlined the importance of international support in tackling the educational system issue by changing the cultural inequality resulting from the Dayton Peace Agreement and creating two schools under one roof.

According to her, nowadays we have a society where the neoliberal consumeristic ideology is mixed with the traditional, patriarchal ideology.

“The opportunistic behavioral patterns fostered by popular culture, the media and throughout education are great blockers for solidarity among the citizens. We have to work on developing empathy between different groups in order to avoid a fragmented society”, she said.

During the discussion, it is concluded that the level of regional cooperation, integration, and constituency is fruitful for the required institution-building.

Mainstreaming Youth Vision

The second panel was dedicated to the perspective and challenges the younger generations in the Western Balkans face. It referred to the linkage between the way the democratic institutions function and the level of political participation of the youth and offered some potential mechanisms that could encourage this relevant part of the population to get socially involved.

Andrea Mićanović, Youth Representative of the RYCO Governing Board on behalf of the Regional Youth Cooperation Office, pointed out the most notable reasons, why the young in Montenegro are unmotivated to undertake the necessary changes that would bring the collective benefits to all of them.

According to her, the problem lies partly in the recalling of the public discourse from the 90s and the predominantly pessimistic public opinion that doesn't put focus on the youth and their future.

"This causes a lack of willingness and faith in their ability to change anything which eventually leads to brain drain", she said.

According to Mićanović, the key solution to the problem is seen in changing the education system. Schools should make the students acquainted with the concept of human rights, strengthen student parliaments and encourage critical thinking.

Angela Angjelovska, Vice President of the National Youth Council of North Macedonia Governing Board, touched upon the work of institutions in North Macedonia when speaking about the implementation of the laws.

“The problem should be solved from the bottom to the top. The education system is ought to teach the young to be socially responsible and engaged. She underlines the influence of political and civil education at school accompanied by lowering the voting age that'd make this part of the society important also for the political parties”, she said.

According to Milica Borjanić, Project Manager, National Youth Council of Serbia, 77% of the young population in Serbia don't find any political party which would adequately represent them.

"For that reason, they don't vote. On the other hand, the politicians don't recognize them as their target group and don't try to address their concerns. It unfortunately creates a vicious circle we have to break. She says that even when there are young representatives in the parliament, they are often at the bottom of the lists with no power of influence. The system doesn't encourage them to be active and involved since they are not in decision-making positions", Borjanić told.

She concluded that the youth represents an important factor of society and giving voice to them is in the collective interest of our community and future. There are many impediments on that path but we certainly have to start from something.

6th WB2EU Ideas go public lab in Berlin 23/03/2023

During an expert roundtable and a public panel in Berlin, participants discussed what the 'Zeitenwende' may mean for the enlargement process in the Western Balkans.

Post WB2EU Western Balkans Enlargement European Integration

During the public panel discussion, participants agreed that the Russian war against Ukraine and the 'Zeitenwende' increased the strategic imperative of Western Balkan enlargement. However, there was doubt about how much a change in rhetoric will translate into a change in action. The implementation of the mobility agreements of the Berlin Process would be a welcome step in the right direction, but whether the 'Zeitenwende' aids in resolving long-standing sources of conflict between Kosovo and Serbia or in Bosnia and Hercegovina is uncertain.

The EU should further extend its cooperation in economic and energy policy and must ensure a credible and transparent enlargement perspective. At the same time, democratic change must be home-grown. Here, the EU should strengthen its democratic conditionality and make sure it supports actors that align with its own values.

The 6th Ideas go public lab of the WB2EU project took place on March 23, 2023 at the European Commission's Representation Office in Berlin. The WB2EU project brings together IEP and 16 other think-tanks, do-tanks, higher education institutes and policy centers from the Western Balkan countries and those most decisive for the enlargement process to support locally-grown democratic momentum and reform in the Western Balkan countries.

The event took off with an expert roundtable, where Berlin-based experts and representatives of the WB2EU network discussed the Berlin Process and Germany's role in the Western Balkans with Valeska Esch, Senior Advisor to the Special Representative for the Countries of the Western Balkans at the German Federal Foreign Office, and Dr Nedžma Džananovic, Professor at the University of Sarajevo's Faculty of Political Science. This was followed by a public panel discussion with Susanne Schütz, Director for South-Eastern Europe, Turkey, OSCE and the Council of Europe at the Federal Foreign Office, and Dr Senada Šelo Šabić, Senior Scientific Associate at the Institute for Development and International Relations in Zagreb.

The 6th WB2EU Ideas go public lab was supported by the European Commission's Representation in Germany, Erasmus+ , and the Federal Foreign Office.

Europeanisation meets democracy from below: The Western Balkans on the search for new European and democratic Momentum (WB2EU)

Is EU enlargement back on track? Moving towards a democratic and united Europe

With Russia's war of aggression against Ukraine, EU enlargement policy has taken on a completely new dynamic. Ukraine, Moldova, and Bosnia and Herzegovina have been granted candidate status; Kosovo has applied for membership; and accession negotiations have started with Northern Macedonia and Albania. In addition, EU Commission President Ursula von der Leyen gave the debate further momentum in her State of the Union address with the prospect of an "EU30+". However, it is not only the candidate countries that must meet the accession criteria; the Union itself must also implement important reforms in order to be fit for enlargement. While EU members are still weighing geopolitical, national, and institutional interests against each other, the Western Balkan countries are in a protracted process of negotiation and reform.

At the conclusion of our three-year Erasmus+ Jean Monnet Network project on Europeanisation, democratisation and strengthening of civil society in the Western Balkans WB2EU, coordinated with the oiip and in cooperation with 15 partners from all over Europe, we want to discuss current developments, obstacles, and perspectives of the EU enlargement and reform process. The project was co-funded by the European Commission under its Erasmus+ Jean Monnet programme.

WB2EU: Western Balkans should use the existing window of opportunity, rule of law remains the key

by EWB 24. 10. 2023.

VIENNA – Regional cooperation among the Western Balkan countries is crucial for their European integration process, agreed the participants of the closing event of the project “Europeanisation meets democracy from below: The Western Balkans on the search for new European and democratic Momentum” (WB2EU), held in Vienna on 9 October.

The event gathered leaders, academics, and experts from the Western Balkan countries and across Europe and served as a platform for discussing the critical role of regional cooperation among the Western Balkan countries in their journey towards European integration.

Secretary General of the Austrian Society for European Politics and the Project Leader for the WB2EU project Paul Schmidt set the stage by highlighting the importance of the three-year project and the collaboration among 17 policy and university institutes from 16 different countries.

Schmidt said that European enlargement had transitioned from a technical approach to a politically driven exercise. He also emphasized three core topics: the rule of law, the social dimension of integration, and democratization from below. Schmidt stressed the common European values shared by the region and the need to act swiftly, given the limited window of opportunity.

“We don’t have a common language. We have many different languages. We don’t have a common religion, but many different religions, but we do have common European values”, said Schmidt.

Schmidt underlined that enlargement was not just about engaging with political elites but engaging with the people, their dreams, and their daily lives. He concluded by emphasizing the importance of ownership and political will in EU capitals, crucial for the success of this ambitious project.

“There’s a window of opportunity, but the window will not be open for many years to come. So, we have to use this time and seize this opportunity now to make progress. There are political winds of change that could move the political landscape in a direction, which would make it more difficult to make progress in terms of accession and negotiating with new and future members”, explained Schmidt.

Paul Schmidt; Photo: WB2EU Network/APA

Austrian Minister of Justice Alma Zadić reflected on what it means to be European – a commitment to peace, solidarity, the rule of law, and democracy.

She acknowledged that European integration had returned to the agenda after years of stagnation and emphasized that it was not merely a matter of geopolitics but the essence of a united Europe.

“The road is long, we know that, but the future of the Western Balkans lies in the European Union. And we should pave those roads to enable visible results in integration quickly, because the people in the Western Balkans, they need to see that progress is there, and they need to see that change is possible”, said Zadić.

Zadić acknowledged the challenges of waning trust in both the EU and national politics and called for delivering on promises and ensuring political leaders in the Western Balkans did the same. She believed that the youth and civil society could drive change and expressed her support for fostering the rule of law in the Western Balkan countries.

Alma Zadic; Photo: WB2EU Network/APA

Former Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of European Affairs of Montenegro Jovana Marović called for a reconsideration of the EU's approach to democracy in the Western Balkans. She questioned the efficacy of various EU strategies and emphasized the importance of the rule of law in EU conditionality.

"The fundamentals are really fundamentals. Rule of law is the most important part of the European integration process and the EU conditionality ", said Marović.

Marović believes that the EU's success depended on strengthening democracy at all levels. She argued that the Western Balkans represented the last chance for the EU not to fail as a political project.

"The future of the European Union, and the answer to the question of why the European Union has to be bigger, is actually that all processes are really connected, and it is really important to focus on all the issues and all the countries where the democracy is struggling ", explained Marović.

Programme Director of the Youth Initiative for Human Rights in Serbia Sofija Todorović highlighted the crucial role of peace in any progress. She criticized the lack of genuine support for the EU and expressed concerns about the economic cooperation model presented as a solution. Todorović stressed that peace should be a guiding principle and called for leaders to reflect this in their actions.

"We cannot talk about trade without peace. We cannot talk about democratic progress without peace. We cannot discuss any other issue that can increase the quality of daily life of people. Because when we are in the conflict people only want peace", said Todorović.

Professor at the New Bulgarian University and representative of the WB2EU Network Anna Krasteva discussed the role of nationalism and populism in the current political landscape. She drew attention to the need for authority in such times, emphasizing the importance of addressing the deep-seated issues within the region.

Moreover, Head of Representation of the European Commission in Austria Martin Selmayr emphasized the enduring success of EU enlargement. He pointed out that the enthusiasm for this project remains, with 10 countries currently knocking at the EU's door.

Selmayr also acknowledged moments of frustration and the need for a realistic approach. He highlighted the new momentum and the positive implications for the EU and the candidate countries, emphasizing that the core purpose of the EU is to ensure peace and stability among its Member States.

"We cannot just enlarge the European Union for the sake of enlargement. It must lead to a strengthening of the European Union", concluded Selmayr.

Interviews

[EWB Interview] Schmidt: EU integration process is always the art of compromise by Sofija Popović 26. 10. 2023.

“Europeanisation meets democracy from below: The Western Balkans on the search for new European and democratic Momentum (WB2EU)” project was launched in 2020. The idea of three-years project was to gather a network consists of 17 think-tanks, do-tanks, higher education institutes and policy centres from the countries that will be most decisive for the enlargement process in the upcoming years.

Some of the aims of the projects was to strengthen pro-European and pro-democratic momentum in the Western Balkans, support the democratic reform process and progressive democratic changes from below, create a sustainable network able to accompany and support Europeanisation and democracy, as well as to foster cooperation between the networks and relevant EU institutions and stakeholders...

During the three years network published 45 policy briefs, multiple op-eds and interviews, gathered a new generation of 'young influentials' dedicated to enlargement, democratisation, well connected to national and EU decision-makers. The closing event of the project was held on 9 October in Vienna. About the results of the projects, the future of EU enlargement on the Western Balkans we spoke with Paul Schmidt, Secretary-General of the Austrian Society for European Politics (ÖgfE) – coordinator of WB2EU project.

European Western Balkans: In the time when WB2EU project was launched there was not much room for optimism when it comes to enlargement. The French No to opening the negotiation with North Macedonia and Albania created a new vacuum in the EU and in the region. In the same time WB region faced rooted structural problems with the states and societies being captured by dominant elites... How much has the situation changed today?

Paul Schmidt: The situation has changed completely. Reform and enlargement are back on the table and high up on the political agenda. The Russian war against Ukraine has put the world upside down and is a historic turning point for European integration.

It is a window of opportunity to make it right, but it is also a window that may not stay open for long. It will take political strength and real commitment to make the Union ready for enlargement and the candidate countries fit to join. There will be no political shortcuts to this process, but where there is a will, there is always a way.

EWB: How do you describe the results of the WB2EU projects? What are the main achievements?

PS: We have all been pushing for a new momentum for EU-reform and enlargement. But to be honest, without the Russian aggression against Ukraine it might have been a mission impossible to reenergize this process. Who is we? At the core of our WB2EU project lies a network of 17 policy institutes from 16 countries.

It is a very diverse group of people with different backgrounds, that has worked together, has learned from each other over the last three years and has been, is and will always be very much engaged in EU-policy making as well as public outreach and advocacy. In this period, we have organized many public debates and ideas labs with stakeholders in the different countries of the region and beyond.

We have published policy briefs on the divergent situations regarding the rule of law, social questions and democracy as well as joint op-eds on the state of enlargement and the political discussions in the countries of our network. We have supported and engaged with progressive and emancipatory forces from below – from grassroot-movements to citizens and local initiatives – that are truly European and pro-democratic.

And we have assisted youth and alternative voices and forces in the society to be heard, get connected and build their own networks. We might not have managed to completely change the world, but tried to contribute our grain of sand. At the end of the day every little bit helps and we will continue doing so.

EWB: How do you assess the target 2030, which was announced by Charles Michel as a potential date for new enlargements? Do you think that this date is realistic?

PS: It is not enough to name possible target dates for the next round of EU enlargement. The accession process is still merit based.

Dates have to be accompanied by a concrete roadmap for reforms otherwise they overshoot expectations, which then may lead to another round of undesired frustration. Setting 2030 as a target date is optimistic, but not impossible. It all depends on the political will and commitment to make real progress on this path towards a stronger EU.

EWB: In the past decade, several times we have seen that the EU was not able to fulfill its promises towards some WB countries, like North Macedonia. Do you think that EU should be cautious when promising dates?

PS: The EU should definitely be careful. I understand the reasoning behind it to push for reforms and political agreements. However, and having in mind the track record of setting dates, one could consider being more cautious.

“ The political wind in the EU capitals can be changing and, in the end, it is the EU member states that have to decide. Moreover, keeping with a date not always depends on the side, that is making the promise.

EWB: In an interview for EWB a year ago, you stated that there will no be enlargement without internal reform of the European Union. What should this reform look like?

PS: The EU's internal set up has to be ready for enlargement otherwise, I am convinced, it will not take place. Enlargement may have become a geopolitical imperative. However, enlargement is not only driven by foreign and security policy concerns but also entails a strong economic, financial, and social dimension. That is why the European Commission proposed reviewing all policy areas and making them ready for a bigger Union.

This is why it is paramount to include the EU candidate countries in the yearly Rule of Law Monitoring of the EU already at an early stage. Here institutional questions might be the easier exercise. But the sheer weight of a possible next enlargement, with nine countries, in particular with Ukraine currently fighting for its existence, has no comparison.

Next to the special security dimension, we should not neglect the substantial economic differences between the EU-27 and the current candidate countries; the nine potential new member states all belong to the ten poorest countries in Europe. Once tough questions of competition or the future financing of the EU are on the table, negotiations and political decisions will naturally become more complicated.

EWB: How do you assess the proposal for the EU reform presented in the so-called French-German report, published in September? Could some solutions related to the enlargement help resolving the standstill in accession negotiations of candidate countries?

SP: I think it a very valuable and interesting report that focuses on reforming the functioning of the EU prior to enlargement. In essence it proposes a set of reforms within the current set of rules as well as outside the EU treaties.

It stresses different degrees of integration as a possible way to succeed, where the differentiation between countries would enable a varying group of core member states to move on and further deepen integration. These are interesting ideas that need to be discussed and would obviously not reduce complexity but rather enhance it. And as always the prove of the pudding is in the eating.

EWB: Last month Austrian Government sent a non-paper calling for the acceleration of EU integration of the Western Balkans. Vienna demands an action plan that would include concrete steps for the gradual integration of the countries from the region. What is your opinion on gradual/phased accession? Do you share concern that maybe some countries may become stuck in certain phases?

SP: I do understand that there is a certain amount of skepticism, but I do not share these concerns. A gradual integration may frontload benefits and thus the glass would be half full and not half empty. The objective of EU-membership would not change.

EWB: It seems that new enlargement has become a geopolitical imperative for the EU. Is there any risk that criteria like rule of law, fight against organized crime and corruption, will no longer be the main for progress on the EU path?

PS: EU-integration is always the art of compromise. However, and while the geopolitical argument is today paramount, enlargement is about more than foreign and security policies.

There can no compromise regarding the rule of law otherwise the Union risks its implosion.

The interview is published in the framework of the WB2EU project. The project aims at the establishment of a network of renowned think-tanks, do-tanks, universities, higher education institutes and policy centres from the Western Balkans, neighbouring countries and EU member states that will be most decisive for the enlargement process and Europeanisation of the region in the upcoming years. The WB2EU project is co-funded by the European Commission under its Erasmus+ Jean Monnet programme.

45 Policy Briefs in the framework of the WB2EU Project

All partner organisations produced 15 Policy Briefs in each of the three project phases:

I Rule of law and justice / II Social dimension / III Democratisation from below

The "Ideas go public Labs" and "Network Meetings" served for discussion on the drafts of the Policy Briefs. The two Austrian partner organisations, initiators and coordinators of the WB2EU project – the Austrian Society for European Politics (ÖGfE) and the Austrian Institute for International Affairs (oiip) – took care of editing, proofreading, designing, publishing, and intense dissemination. The “Ideas go public Labs” also provided room for the presentation and discussion of the final policy briefs to main stakeholders and to a wider public.

The network partners from the Western Balkans provided a national perspective on the project phases. The neighbouring countries (Croatia, Slovenia, Greece, Hungary, Bulgaria, and Rumania) offered insights into the (trans)regional dimension of the topic, while the Policy Briefs from important EU member states for the process (France, Germany, and Italy) tackled the topic from the perspective of the EU institutions (European Commission, European Parliament, and EU Council) and member states.

All Policy Briefs can be found under the following link on the WB2EU website:

Europeanisation meets democracy from below: The Western Balkans on the search for new European and democratic Momentum

The next few years will be decisive for the democratic and European future of the Western Balkans. In addition to a credible enlargement perspective and a positive enlargement narrative, which need to be reinvented and reinvigorated, it is vital to support rule of law, civil dialogue, pluralism, and the fight against corruption, as well as the social dimension. It is crucial to invest more in social inclusion to support the broad vision of just and democratic societies, which needs to include various bottom-up initiatives and actors.

Our “WB2EU Network” will activate / connect / research / disseminate and create joint output on the defined topics by bringing together academia, civil society, and relevant stakeholders at the national, regional, and EU levels.

Key points:

- reform, consolidate and reenergise EU enlargement until 2025 and beyond
- mobilise, support and engage with progressive and emancipatory forces from below (movements, citizens, local initiatives) that are truly European and pro-democratic
- enhance youth and alternative voices and forces in the society
- strengthen social dimension, rule of law and justice in the region
- connect young and senior researchers, scholars, representatives of civil society, national and EU institutions, stakeholders, policy-makers, and citizens engaged in pro-democratic initiatives (local/regional/national)

The proposed activities shall be implemented in 3 phases (29.10.2020-28.10.2023):

I Rule of law and justice / II Social dimension / III Democratisation from below

- reform, consolidate, and reenergise EU enlargement until 2025 and beyond
- mobilise, support, and engage with progressive and emancipatory forces from below (movements, citizens, and local initiatives) that are truly European and pro-democratic
- enhance youth and alternative voices and forces in society
- strengthen the social dimension, rule of law, and justice in the region
- connect young and senior researchers, scholars, representatives of civil society, national and EU institutions, stakeholders, policy-makers, and citizens engaged in pro-democratic initiatives (local, regional, and national)

WB2EU Network:

The network consists of 17 renowned think tanks, do tanks, higher education institutes and policy centres from the countries that will be most decisive for the enlargement process in the upcoming years.

Europeanisation meets democracy from below: Western Balkans on the search for a new European and democratic Momentum (WB2EU)

The Centre for Contemporary Politics (CSP) has provided media support in the framework of a "Media Cooperation" to the Erasmus+ Jean Monnet Network Project Europeanisation meets democracy from below: Western Balkans on the search for a new European and democratic Momentum (WB2EU) through its European Western Balkans web portal (EWB).

From March 2021 to October 2023, EWB has published 45 articles about Policy Briefs published within the project, 6 announcements of events organised within the WB2EU project, 8 reports about the organised events, 3 interviews and 2 op-eds by individuals connected to the project, and 2 other articles, totalling 66 published articles.

Articles published on EWB were also published on EWB's social networks, primarily Facebook, Twitter, X and LinkedIn, as well as promoted through newsletters and EWB's mobile app through push notifications.

The total readership of all the articles amounts to a total of 17,007 views. The real numbers were actually much higher due to technical issues with analytics in one 6-month period of the cooperation.

Please find below the dates, names and links to all EWB articles published as a part of media support to the WB2EU project from March 2021 to October 2023:
