The unification of Europe has an impact on civilization that goes beyond security and peace. Europe is the source of the progress from which we all benefit, and Europeans today are capable of making as great a contribution to the development of civilization through their creative spirit as in the past. It is by unifying Europe that we will achieve this.

PolEU – Jean Monnet Chair

Jean Monnet Chair on Policymaking in the EU (PolEU) aims to cover and deepen teaching and research in the field of European integration studies at the University of Ljubljana–Faculty of Social Sciences. In this respect the project aims to strengthen the curricula covering EU policymaking and policy studies at the re-accredited BA-level Political Science study programme and at the newly established MA-level European Studies and Political Science programmes. With ambition to deepen teaching of European Union studies, an innovative teaching method - simulation of EU policymaking - will be introduced.

To define the needs in European Union studies, structural dialogue between academics, experts, policy-makers and representatives of civil society in the field of EU policymaking and policy studies will be established as part of the PolEU project. To support the scope of European Union studies with the link to existing EU policies, various study materials with open access will be prepared. The core teaching and research revolves around the theme of policymaking process and policy studies in the EU.
